13 @triplepundit: Q4: Consumers still buy $5 t-shirts without much thought. What can brands do to encourage conscious shopping? #3pChat about 2 hours ago

12 @triplepundit: A2. Environmental issues in fashion supply chain are significant—example: it takes 700+ gallons of water to make just one T-shirt #3pChat about 3 hours ago

9 @triplepundit: Consumer demand for unreasonably inexpensive apparel is part of the problem. Cheap clothes don’t pay living wages. #3pchat @nickaster about 3 hours ago

Issues in apparel supply chains are from cotton fields to factory: labor exploitation, the environment, child labor &…

A few more issues = inadequate earnings, long hours, unethical treatment, unsafe environment & lack of social protection.

Forests are destroyed for such things as fibre production, leading to droughts and climate change.

Throwaway fast fashion is never sustainable, need to encourage clothes to be worn longer & bought second-hand more often.

Carbon intensity of power in China is a huge source of GHG emissions embedded in apparel.

Are you asking if sustainability is on trend?
Fashion industry has become an unsustainable race to the bottom. Demanding artificially low prices can lead to poor conditions for workers.

We need more recycling programs. Transportation and planning are big issues.

As a designer of fair trade org clothing, the idea of "cheaper & faster" is an impossible feat to do ethically.

Environmental issues in fashion supply chains are significant—example: it takes 700+ gallons of water to make just one T-shirt.

Issues in apparel supply chains are from cotton fields to factory: labor exploitation, the environment, child labor &...

Consumer demand for unreasonably inexpensive apparel is part of the problem. Cheap clothes don't pay living wages.

Environmental issues in fashion supply chains are significant, ex: takes 700+ gal #water to make 1 T-shirt.

Throwaway fast fashion is never sustainable, need to encourage clothes to be worn longer & bought second-hand more often.

Factories compete among each other for contracts by lowering the cost to produce goods. This is passed on to the garment worker.

Right! Co's need to look to international norms when dealing with human rights issues if no legislation in place.
